BOURNEMOUTH WEST

“It's important for our children and for our children's children that we look after the planet, that we look after Bournemouth.

“This is my home, this is where I want to stay, this is where I want to create a future for my family and for my children.

“I don't want to see any more oil rigs off the coast of Bournemouth, threatening our futures. I don't want to see any fossil fuel extraction anywhere. It's time we moved on from that.

“We deserve better, we need better. We've been given 10 years to make serious changes to how we live on this planet, to what we do.

“And I think the Green Party offer that choice, a real alternative, a real challenge to the status quo that we've been living in.”

NO CONSERVATIVE CANDIDATE HAS LOST IN BOURNEMOUTH IN A GENERAL ELECTION SINCE 1906

In this First Past The Post voting system, Bournemouth residents don't really have any influence at all over the result. Only the “marginal seats” determine the General Election outcome – every time. None of the marginal seats are in Dorset.

Conor Burns is one of 200+ Conservative MPs who know that they can basically do what they like, because they always win re-election anyway.

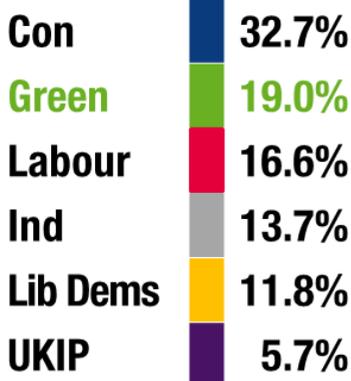

Even if Labour were to win an overall majority of 90, the Conservatives would still be expected to hold both seats in Bournemouth.
