ALL ABOARD FOR A PUBLIC RAILWAY?

Is your rail fare too costly? Over this Parliament average wages are expected to have risen by 6.9%¹ while regulated fares have increased by more than 20%¹. At a conservative estimate, around £1.2bn² is lost each year as a result of fragmentation and privatisation – this is money which could, and should, be reinvested to improve our services and reduce fares.

Yet just last month, the Government announced plans to re-privatise the East Coast Mainline - a dreadful deal for passengers and taxpayers. In the five years it's been run by the public sector, East Coast returned nearly £1bn to the taxpayer, as well as increasing passenger numbers, introducing a new timetable, improving punctuality and establishing industry leading approaches to waste recycling and reducing carbon emissions. The decision to re-privatise was clearly not made in the public interest.

It is time to change track? Re-nationalising the railways has been Green Party policy since they were privatised and has public backing too, with 60% in favour, 20% against in polls³. Today, Green MP Caroline Lucas's Railway Bill has its second reading in Parliament. The Bill will require the Secretary of State for Transport to assume control of rail passenger franchises as they expire. More at www.carolinelucas.com.

Green MEP for the South West

In May last year local voters helped elect Molly Scott Cato as the first Green MEP for the South West. Molly holds the finance brief in the European Green Group and has been leading the campaign against TTIP, the secretive EU-US trade negotiations which would be good for big business, but not so good for us. You can find out more about Molly's wonderful work on our behalf at www.mollymep.org.uk and sign up for her regular email updates.

A Green MEP elected in the South West; Green Party polling ahead of the Lib Dems in national polls; and a Green MP is MP of the Year for 2014.

The political landscape in Britain is changing. As the old tribal loyalties to the Conservative and Labour parties continue to break down, increasing numbers of voters are finding out that the Green Party is a close match for them in terms of values - and the policies and behaviour that flow from those values.

You may already know that to be the case for you. If not, have a look at our core values, mini-manifesto or in-depth policies at www.greenparty.org.uk or use www.voteforpolicies.org.uk to find the best matched party for you. Close to half a million people have used this blind test, and Green Party policies are the most popular, both locally and across the country.

More Greens for Parliament?

Would you like to have a Green parliamentary candidate to vote for in the general election on 7th May? For the Green Party to continue its rapid growth (Green Party membership trebled in Christchurch last year), it is crucial that people have Green Party candidates to vote for at elections and that the Green Party's distinctive voice and policies be heard.

This is where we need your help. It costs money to field candidates in the general election. We have set up crowdfunding pages to receive contributions towards these costs. We invite you to be part of the crowdfunding campaign in your constituency.

Please donate, share, join and volunteer if you can.
